Funding, logistics slow cheers for in-state gas line

FAIRBANKS Gov. Sarah Palins proposed in-state gas line, unveiled Monday with some fanfare, faces uncertain prospects with its funding and gas supply, according to some of those involved in the project.

Palin announced a public-private partnership between the state, Enstar Natural Gas Co. and the Alaska Natural Gas Development Authority to build a small-diameter bullet line within the next five years. The plan is to link Anchorage, Fairbanks and the North Slope in a way that will ease Fairbanks home heating oil woes soon while opening a route for North Slope gas to reach Anchorage markets in the long-term.

The smaller line eventually could serve as the in-state spur of a major pipeline, such as the one proposed by TransCanada or the joint proposal by BP and ConocoPhillips.

Officials with the state, Enstar and ANGDA agree the line would put infrastructure in place to allow Alaskans to access their resources, but each party envisions that happening in a somewhat different way. The state is hoping to send a signal to explorers that the market demands more gas, thereby spurring new exploration and assuring a steady energy supply for Southcentral, said Joe Balash, special assistant to the governor on oil and gas issues.

Enstar is looking to a line that could feed Anchorage markets with North Slope gas as Cook Inlet contracts become shorter and more difficult to arrange, said Curtis Thayer, director of corporate and external affairs for the utility.

And the voter-created ANGDA, which can access funding outside of the state treasury, said the bullet line keeps Alaskas options open into the future, with the potential for boosting propane and liquefied natural gas markets as well, said Harold Heinze, CEO.

How a spur line plays out could hinge on supply. Enstar and ANGDA seem less confident than the state that Cook Inlet can continue supplying gas to meet needs, citing some lapses already at peak winter use in Anchorage.

We have been unsuccessful in negotiating contracts over five years due to the deliverability of gas in the Cook Inlet, Thayer said. Because of that, he added, Enstar has had to look elsewhere for gas sources. The Anchorage-area utility serves about half of Alaskas population with 3,000 miles of distribution lines in Southcentral.

Do we want to roll the dice, or do we want to spend the money and build a line to the (North Slope) foothills? Thayer asked. We know there is gas on the North Slope. The thing is, we dont have the gas in Cook Inlet. The gas does not exist in Cook Inlet.

Fairbanks Natural Gas President Dan Britton said he, too, has questions about Palins proposal to deliver Cook Inlet natural gas to Fairbanks.

We are doing that today but struggle to get contracts for Cook Inlet gas, he said. Its hard for me to understand what the justification might be for a multi-billion investment when youre unable to secure a longer gas supply.

One possible supply could come from Anadarkos development of the Gubik field in the North Slope foothills, Thayer said. FNG also is turning to the North Slope, with plans to build a liquid natural gas facility in the next few years and truck the product to Fairbanks markets.

Whether Palins bullet line stops at Fairbanks or reaches the North Slope depends on whether Cook Inlet gas can supply the line and whether exploration underway in the Nenana and Copper River basins turns into development, according to an administration press release.

Heinze, of ANGDA, said a bullet line might bridge the gap for Fairbanks until a large line links the North Slope with Canada and the Lower 48. He said the general view is that Cook Inlet has lots of potential but that he and Enstar are somewhat more skeptical.

Enstar officials estimated Cook Inlet supplies could run out by 2014, he said.

There is no doubt there are some real problems, Heinze said. On the other hand, the administration is very confident, and they are the landowner.

The governors office said it believes Cook Inlet has strong resources.

What were trying to do here is create access to markets for gas that we believe is in Cook Inlet, our geologists believe is in Cook Inlet. Its creating the opportunity for that gas to make it into the market and get sold, Balash said.

Balash acknowledged that the proven reserves in Southcentral are falling into the nine- to 10-year range, but he said a changing supply-demand ration may drive new exploration.

The Richardson Route was previously considered by ANGDA, and offers a known path and access to potential military and industrial clients, while avoiding permitting problems that could crop up near a national park, Heinze said. Exact routing is one of the things the team will have to discuss.

Progress of any kind probably wont be made until after the legislative special session on TransCanadas pipeline proposal under the Alaska Gasline Inducement Act wraps up this summer.

Balash expected the group to then iron out a timeline, evaluate financing options and decide how each party can contribute.

We have a pretty healthy treasury and the ability to do some things, the luxury to do some things now, he said. At the end of the day its likely that well be asking the Legislature for some form of financial support or commitment or guarantees something that helps bring surety to the project.

In Fairbanks, Britton said that once a larger supply of gas reaches the city, either through the bullet line or trucked in as LNG, an expansion could be in order to the 50-plus miles of distribution line already in place.

The timing of expansion would depend on peoples interest level and the economics of the expansion, Britton said. Conditions, roads and populations all figure into the cost equation, he said, although on average new distribution may run $200,000 per mile.

With probably 50% or more of requests we receive; they request the first family while I'm guessing that only portions of the family attend and do so minimally.

I just returned a phone call from Kyle Hopkins of the Anchorage Daily News who initially was looking for a copy of the 2004 opinion addressing travel on the King Air aircraft. He had located the opinion online just as I called back. He then said he was looking into the question of when a governor's family could travel at state expense and asked whether there was any other opinion on this issue. I advised generally that a family member might travel at state expense if the member was to attend an official function (he said for example the inauguration), and that I could not recall other opinion or guidance on this point.

He then wanted to know whether there was a statute, regulation or other guidance defining what would be an official function or state business. I advised that I was not aware of any. It would likely depend on the circumstance and the involved official's authority. He also asked who would decide and I suggested again it would likely be addressed in the circumstances on a case by case basis by the governor's office.

He did not say or suggest whether he is looking at the question with respect to Governor Palin or a former governor.

Subject: FW: Phone Call from ADN Reporter Kyle Hopkins re travel for governor's family

Dear Governor Palin,

I just spoke with Mr. Nizich after I forwarded this to him. He said I should go ahead and let you know directly. He says your office has also received phone inquiries on travel in the last 24 hours from the ADN as well. This is just to give you a fuller picture of what may be happening in the news world. Talis

CONFIDENTIAL – ATTORNEY CLIENT PRIVILEGE

I just returned a phone call from Kyle Hopkins of the Anchorage Daily News who initially was looking for a copy of the 2004 opinion addressing travel on the King Air aircraft. He had located the opinion online just as I called back. He then said he was looking into the question of when a governor's family could travel at state expense and asked whether there was any other opinion on this issue. I advised generally that a family member might travel at state expense if the member was to attend an official function (he said for example the inauguration), and that I could not recall other opinion or guidance on this point.

He then wanted to know whether there was a statute, regulation or other guidance defining what would be an official function or state business. I advised that I was not aware of any. It would likely depend on the circumstance and the involved official's authority. He also asked who would decide and I suggested again it would likely be addressed in the circumstances on a case by case basis by the governor's office.

He did not say or suggest whether he is looking at the question with respect to Governor Palin or a former governor.

I am a high school teacher in Fairbanks, Alaska. I teach math (everything from geometry to calculus), am a cross-country running coach, and the father of a 3.5 year old and a six month old.

I was the Academic Decathlon (ACADECA) coach at West Valley for many years(counting my bride's time coaching and mine it has been 10 years). We have been very successful, winning the state championship 3 of the last four years. We are having a "good bye picnic with students from the last 10 years at the end of July".

I'm writing because ACADECA is an ideal way to motivate rural students for exellence. Unfortunately, with budget cuts, fewer rural schools are participating in the state competition which is sponsered by G.C.I.

Please consider allocating state monies for rural schools for materials and flights to the state competition.

If you would like to hear more about this opportunity for educational excellence, please e-mail me back.

Thank you,

P.S. You are doing an awesome job. Even though I often vote democratic, I have your back and I will vote for your re-election.

I have not been informed of any phone calls to my office. Do u know if I am to return any calls or do anything on this? I sure hope nothing is written that we have to react to, based on adn having misinformation or not enough info.
BTW, this trip I'm taking to NGA with family is being paid by NGA because it's some annual family-invitation event for the nation's governors. I'm right on that, am I, Kris?

Geologically, there are 1.4 trillion cubic feet of gas available in Cook Inlet. That is a 9-10 year supply if the LNG export at Kenai continues (its current export license is set to expire in 2011). Without another extension of the LNG export license, those reserves would last an additional six years or so.

Undiscovered resources in Cook Inlet have been estimated by the geologists at the USGS (feds) and DGGS (state). The USGS is very optimistic--in excess of 10 trillion cubic feet. The DGGS and Division of Oil and Gas are much more conservative--closer to 5 or 6 trillion cubic feet. If it's the lower figure, then 5 trillion cubic feet would be more than 50 years' supply.

other recent comment»

I hate to tell you but there are a few of us who are really confused.

We really need someone to step up and help us understand what is really going on right now in our state.

When we first heard Governor Sarah Palin announce that she wants and will heartily support a natural gas pipeline from the Kenai Peninsula to Fairbanks....we thought she must have accidentally got the announcement backwards and that she really meant support for the bullet line to bring natural gas to the Kenai from the North Slope.

Then we realized that her announcement was not backwards and she really wants to bring natural gas from the Kenai to Fairbanks...not only that, but the idea has been blessed by Borough Mayor John Williams and many other people who are supposed to have their heads screwed on straight.
And that is the reason for our confusion.
You mean to tell me that someone is hiding natural gas in a big underground pocket under Cook Inlet or somewhere in our Borough? I hope so.
Didn't the State government and the Feds just approve a ten year contract with Conoco Phillips to send what little natural gas we have left in Cook Inlet to a foreign country?
Didn't one of the biggest employers, Agrium, just shut down and send over three hundred people packing because there is not enough natural gas to operate their big fertilizer plant?
Isn't one of the biggest worries of government officials the possibility of not having enough natural gas available in South Central Alaska to heat our homes and businesses during the cold winter months?
Why then would anyone want to take the natural gas that we do not have on the Kenai Peninsula and ship it north through the rail belt to Fairbanks?
Why wouldn't our state government organize and get behind an effort to bring natural gas south from the North Slope where we have virtually unlimited amounts ready to go to market?
Why would we even be thinking about sending North Slope natural gas through a pipeline through Canada to the lower 48 markets without demanding that, first of all, it be shipped to Fairbanks , Anchorage and the Kenai?
What is going on? I hope someone knows, but to us, that certainly does not appear to be the case. No wonder some of us are really confused.
Think About It!

Subject: Cook Inlet Salmon Management

Cora,

I find it very disheartening that the state has subverted the BOF process by creating new regulation for Upper Cook Inlet salmon. I'm referring to the restriction placed on the drift fleet by Commissioner Lloyd for tomorrow 7/10/08. This new regulation was created after the BOF hearings and stated in the Department's (ADF&G) pre-season managment plan announced months ago. There was no new information that was available to make this decision and it flies in the face of the BOF process. If this had been decided as a necessary step in-season, then I would agree. However, the in-season data seems to support the opposite of a closure, but a standard full opener for the drift fleet. Here are just a couple of new information data sets:

1. The OTF (offshore test fishing) indexes are 2 times the average (1988-2007) 602 (2008) vs 292 avg. (1988-2007).

2. The drift catch is the 6th highest since 1980 with fewer boats fishing.

All this seems to point out to a fairly large run of sockeye to UCI and indicates more abundant sockeye for all systems. The department and we also supported a simplification of the UCI salmon plans to allow for flexible and in-season management--which all our users and areas across this state rely on given the variables of salmon returns. We are perplexed to why the department has done this and many of us have tried to get a response to why this has occurred, but no real response from the Commissioner has been received.

The state of Alaska has had sound fisheries management based on the best available data. It seems we are going backwards here in UCI. Except for actula weir counts, the use of the Didson sonar shows the most accurate counts and at the BOF hearings this winter the department stated that it would be using the Didson. However now the department is using the Bendix sonar. The department is placing restrictions on users prior to to in-season information would warrant any such restriction. If we are not going to use the local area manager, the best science available, and other sound managmenet practices--why not just fire 90% of ADF&G staff and let some one from Juneau decide when and what occurs in our fisheries. It seems that's already happening--so why not save the state some money on staff and let our fisheries follow the fatal course of the lower-48 and other world fisheries destroyed by not using the best managment and science available.

Anyway, you can sense my frustration with not using the best in-season management and best science (i.e. best sonar, etc...) My hope is that Alaska will manage it's fisheries wisely and keep politics (i.e. salmon task force, ...) out of it. Unfortunately that will never happen, but as an optimist--I still have faint hope.

Respectfully,

Brent M. Western

Dear Sir or Madam,

I'm writing to bring your attention to the increasingly inapropriate comments posted by the blogger syrin. Every day she posts comments that have absolutely no bearing on policy. For example, today the ADN posted a positive story on the national press Governor Palin is receiving, yet syrin accuses the governor of having an affair or makes hateful comments about her young children. I don't often feel compelled to write, but syrin's comments are never on topic, nor are they civil as is stated in the terms of use.

Thank you for your time.

I called Pat. We read through Sherry's blog entries from yesterday together. They are so hateful and hurtful. He said he banned her once already. Her husband asked that she be allowed back on and that she'd behave. Pat agrees the entries are over the top, he said to ask people to "flag" the ones that are lies or whatever- he was very nice about ti, but said they don't have time to censor all this - I said I don't have time either. Todd may call Sherry or Tom and ask them why they lie like they do.

I think our security guys should check into her because the times she's blogged about Todd's schedule and what we drive have really infringed on our privacy rights and potential safety when psychos know when Todd's out of town.

The state is paying for travel to NGA as is customary w/invitations to first family events such as NGA's invitation and agenda shows for family events. With probably 50% or more of requests we receive; they request the first family while I'm guessing that only portions of the family attend and do so minimally.

CONFIDENTIAL - ATTORNEY CLIENT PRIVILEGE

I just returned a phone call from Kyle Hopkins of the Anchorage Daily News who initially was looking for a copy of the 2004 opinion addressing travel on the King Air aircraft. He had located the opinion online just as I called back. He then said he was looking into the question of when a governor's family could travel at state expense and asked whether there was any other opinion on this issue. I advised generally that a family member might travel at state expense if the member was to attend an official function (he said for example the inauguration), and that I could not recall other opinion or guidance on this point.

He then wanted to know whether there was a statute, regulation or other guidance defining what would be an official function or state business. I advised that I was not aware of any. It would likely depend on the circumstance and the involved official's authority. He also asked who would decide and I suggested again it would likely be addressed in the circumstances on a case by case basis by the governor's office.

He did not say or suggest whether he is looking at the question with respect to Governor Palin or a former governor.

Governor, do you know how loved you are? These four or five bitter people are so NOT representative. You are so, so loved. The enemy is trying to discourage you. Hang I there! You are doing such an awesome job. You are an amazing lady and the Lord is your defender. He knows the truth and He is going to vindicate you. It hurts my heart to hear these horrible people are bringing you down. We forgive them, Lord. Help theses people come to know You.

Guys, I may be pretty wimpy about this family stuff, but I feel like I'm at the breaking point with the hurtful gossip about my family that Sherry and others get away with. Bear with me. I hate this part of the job and many days I feel like it's not worth it when they have to put up with the hate that spews from people like Sherry, and there are others.

Below is the email Don sent to ADN. It's not much, but we were trying to bring there attention to this ongoing and very frustrating situation. Her comments are downright libelous. You're right-she's a crazy hater.

Hey,

Cut the body of this email and paste into a new email and send to content@adn.com.

Dear Sir or Madam,

I'm writing to bring your attention to the increasingly inapropriate comments posted by the blogger syrin. Every day she posts comments that have absolutely no bearing on policy. For example, today the ADN posted a positive story on the national press Governor Palin is receiving, yet syrin accuses the governor of having an affair or makes hateful comments about her young children. I don't often feel compelled to write, but syrin's comments are never on topic, nor are they civil as is stated in the terms of use.

Thank you for your time.
